INSTRUCTIONS TO CANDIDATES

-  All questions are to be attempted
-  All your answers must be written on this question paper

1. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Most African tribes have a communal approach to life. A person is an individual only to the extent that he is a member of a clan, a community or a family. Land was never owned by an individual, but by the people, and could not be disposed of by any body. Where there were traditional heads, they held land in trust for the community generally. Food grown on the land was regarded as food to feed the hungry among the tribe. Although each family might have its own piece of land to cultivate, when there was famine or when someone simply wanted to eat, he merely looked for food and ate it. In many parts of Africa, it was thought quite natural for a traveler to walk into the nearest garden (shamba) and pick some banana or maize and eat it. Nobody would interfere with him unless he went in and started taking loads of food away. Then he was of course contravening the law of hospitality and generosity and exploiting the clan through whose land he was passing.

The same attitude prevailed in marriage customs. Bride price had to be paid, but if a man did not own cattle it did not rule out marriage for him. Cattle owned by an uncle or a distant or by any member of the tribe could easily be acquired to provide the amount. In such cases, the tribal elders usually ruled that several people should provide cattle for the man who had no wealth of his own. It was not expected that he should repay them, instead it was expected that he would do the same in years to come if some else's son found him self in a similar position.

When money was introduced, the African came to work for wages, but he still maintained contact with his native land as the only source of security to which he could look in old age or in sickness. He was secure in his mind that he could go back to his home and be taken care of by his people. It was a social security scheme with no written rules but with a strict pattern to which every one adhered. If someone did not adhere to the pattern, and did not take on the obligation inherent to the pattern, and did not take on the obligation inherent in the system, he found that when he next got into trouble he received little or no attention.

He was expected to live harmoniously with others in his community and make his contribution to work done in the village. When a hut had to be built, everyone was expected to go out and cut the trees and erect the frame. The women would bring the cow dung and the earth to make the floor and draw water to make the plaster for the walls. Then the men would bring the grass for thatching, and the work would be done together. The owner of the hut would cook food for everyone and the work would be finished in a day. If someone refused to take part, he would find that when his time came to build a hut, few people would come to help him and he might be completely boycotted. This was the kind of sanction which operated against the lazy man.

If he persisted and refused to help when there was harvesting to be done or weeding during the rainy months, he could be disowned and left to wander about alone. This was a strong sanction, because it meant he lost his whole source of security in life. Many of those who were disowned saw how foolish they had been and asked to come back into the clan, ceremonies had to be performed before they were taken back.

Question:

In about 120 words, summarize how the African people used to have a communal approach to life

Read the following passage carefully and answer the question that follows

Consumption of Marijuana has continued to grow in Uganda despite increased vigilance on the part of the police and other law enforcement agencies. Order to beat the police; its consumers have resorted to taking the drug in food and tea. This is a recent shift from the traditional way of consumption where it is smoked. Oil is now extracted from marijuana plants and mixed with tea and food. This system is safer because it does away with the smell on which the consumed.

Marijuana plants fall in the categories of 'cannabis sativa' which produce narcotic drugs like cannabis herbal (thrashed leaves mixed with seeds), cannabis resin (hashis) and cannabis oil. Major consumers of Marijuana are idle youths, street children, casual labourers and students, university students inclusive. Of recent, the working class and unemployed elite have jumped on the bandwagon. It is also on demand across the borders where dubious dealers abound. People use it in cold conditions for warmth, to activate or alter the state the state of mind and for crime related purpose are the least important reasons why it is consumed.

A psychiatrist from the national mental hospital at Butabika, say Marijuana has an active ingredient called Tetrahydro cannabinol (THC) which has a disastrous effect on the brain. It causes a disease called hallisnogen, which causes falsehood in the mind. It is this disorganized mind which describes one's actions and behaviour in the long run. Records indicate that 8% of mental illness registered in Butabika hospital are Marijuana related. In a research carried out in secondary schools and institutions of higher learning by the ministry of health, 20% of the total students interviewed admitted having smooked Marijuana.

Marijuana is addictive drug once one is used to it, a lot of the substance has consumed so as to derive satisfaction. Once addicted to it, the abuser has a tendency to feel tough and strong; thus committing criminal offences like rape, defilement, murder and robbery. It is said that are influenced by Marijuana to commit atrocities. It also helps them withstand harsh weather conditions in the bush.

Addicts of Marijuana normally have red eyes that cannot see properly, their mouths are dry and they cannot talk properly. Their hearts pump very fast and they are anxious and tensed up. They begin to see strange things which in fact do not exist or to speak alone due to the development of schizophrenic illness. They behave strangely, are socially withdrawn, prefer isolation and have a chronic smell.

Marijuana affects the intestines leading to constipation and destroys the reproductive system leading to impotence. The heart is also damaged resulting in heart failure. The tar in it, in tobacco, causes chest infection resulting in cancer of the lungs. It further damages the brain leading to schizophrenia and other cases like suicide and violence. It further causes hallucinogen (false hood of the mind) leading to road and job related accidents. Again it damages the body patient may never recover. Among students, it lowers I Q, leading to loss of quality education and poor performance in schools. While encouraging idleness, it also causes anxiety which leads to prostitution, rape defilement, spread of diseases like AIDS and other crimes like robbery and murder.
